This chapter explores how the court can prevent custody or parenting time arrangements from providing abusers with opportunities for continuing harassment, threats, or violence.

4.1 The Best Interest Factors

The principal authority for resolving child custody disputes in Michigan is the Child Custody Act of 1970.* This Act directs that the “best interests” of the child control a court’s determinations regarding child custody and parenting time. MCL 722.25(1); MSA 25.312(5)(1).

*MCL 722.21
et seq; MSA
25.312(1) et seq

MCL 722.23; MSA 25.312(3) lists twelve best interest factors for Michigan trial courts to weigh in making child custody and parenting time determinations, as follows:

“As used in this act, ‘best interests of the child’ means the sum total of the following factors to be considered, evaluated, and determined by the court:

- (a) The love, affection, and other emotional ties existing between the parties involved and the child.
- (b) The capacity and disposition of the parties involved to give the child love, affection, and guidance and to continue the education and raising of the child in his or her religion or creed, if any.

- (c) The capacity and disposition of the parties involved to provide the child with food, clothing, medical care or other remedial care recognized and permitted under the laws of this state in place of medical care, and other material needs.
- (d) The length of time the child has lived in a stable, satisfactory environment, and the desirability of maintaining continuity.
- (e) The permanence, as a family unit, of the existing or proposed custodial home or homes.
- (f) The moral fitness of the parties involved.
- (g) The mental and physical health of the parties involved.
- (h) The home, school, and community record of the child.
- (i) The reasonable preference of the child, if the court considers the child to be of sufficient age to express preference.
- (j) The willingness and ability of each of the parties to facilitate and encourage a close and continuing parent-child relationship between the child and the other parent or the child and the parents.
- (k) Domestic violence, regardless of whether the violence was directed against or witnessed by the child.
- (l) Any other factor considered by the court to be relevant to a particular child custody dispute.” [Emphasis added.]

Domestic violence is specifically listed in subsection (k) of the foregoing statute as a best interest factor for a trial court to weigh in proceedings under the Child Custody Act. Additionally, domestic violence is relevant to subsection (j), because it directly affects each party’s willingness or ability to encourage the other’s relationship with the child. Sections 4.2–4.4 will explore how these factors are weighed and applied in making custody determinations. Section 4.5 considers these best interest factors in the context of joint custody determinations in cases involving domestic violence.

Note: The Child Custody Act contains no definition of “domestic violence.” For definitions that apply in other contexts, see:

- F MCL 400.1501; MSA 16.611(1) defining “domestic violence” for purposes of the activities of the Michigan Domestic Violence Prevention and Treatment Board. See Section 2.11 for a citation, and Section 3.1(A) for discussion of the Board’s activities.

F MCL 600.2950; MSA 27A.2950, defining the relationships for which a domestic relationship personal protection order may be issued. See Section 7.2(A) for more information.

F MCL 750.81, 750.81a; MSA 28.276, 28.276(1), defining the domestic relationships warranting special treatment in criminal assault cases. See Sections 8.2–8.3 for more information.

In its Michigan Custody Evaluation Model, p 37 (October, 1998), the State Court Administrative Office comments as follows:

“The evaluator must consider any violence that has been directed against the child, witnessed by the child, and/or caused the child to suffer any emotional trauma. One of the most common forms of domestic violence is the emotional abuse inflicted upon a child while residing in an environment where violent acts occur or where there is a threat that a violent act may occur. The emotional abuse is a result of the fear that a child endures while awaiting the next abusive episode.”

4.2 Weighing Domestic Violence as a Best Interest Factor

In disputes over child custody, a trial court must evaluate and make specific findings of fact on each of the statutory “best interest” factors. Dowd v Dowd, 97 Mich App 276, 279 (1980). However, Michigan courts have great discretion in weighing the statutory best interest factors. MCL 722.23; MSA 25.312(3) contains no direction for courts in weighing each factor in relation to the others, other than to state that a child’s “best interest” consists of the “sum total” of the listed factors. The Michigan appellate courts have likewise refused to adopt a bright-line, mathematical formula for making “best interest” determinations. See Lustig v Lustig, 99 Mich App 716, 731 (1980). In reviewing trial courts’ best interest determinations, the Court of Appeals has held that:

F The statutory best interest factors need not be given equal weight.

In McCain v McCain, 229 Mich App 123 (1998), the Court reviewed a custody award that was based on findings in favor of one party on three out of four factors on which the parties were not equivalent. The party who was awarded custody prevailed on factors (b), (c), and (h), while the other party prevailed on factor (j), the “friendly parent” factor. With respect to factor (j), the Court of Appeals found that the party who was awarded custody would try to destroy the other party’s relationship with the children. The appeals panel upheld the trial court’s custody award, however, concluding that it could not find support for the proposition that “a finding on one factor must completely countervail all the other findings....” 229 Mich App at 131. Despite this holding, the panel nonetheless acknowledged that the statutory best interest factors need not be given equal weight:

Streicher* was decided before the 1993 addition of domestic violence to the list of best interest factors in MCL 722.23; MSA 25.312(3).

“Neither a trial court in making a child custody decision nor this Court in reviewing such a decision must mathematically assess equal weight to each of the statutory factors.” 229 Mich App at 131.

See also Streicher v Streicher, 128 Mich App 5 (1983),* in which the Court of Appeals overturned the trial court’s custody award, holding that the trial court had not properly weighed the abusive behavior of the party to whom custody had been awarded. The trial court had found the parties to be equal with respect to a majority of the best interest factors, including mental health. In reversing the trial court’s custody award, the Court of Appeals held that the trial court’s finding of equality with respect to mental health was against the great weight of evidence. The panel noted that “deciding what is in the best interests of the child...is much more difficult than merely tallying runs, hits, and errors in box score fashion following a baseball game.” 128 Mich App at 14, citing Lustig v Lustig, supra.

F When a party’s behavior is relevant to more than one statutory factor, the trial court may consider it wherever necessary to make an accurate best interest assessment.

In Fletcher v Fletcher, 229 Mich App 19 (1998), the defendant asserted that the trial court erroneously considered evidence of her negative influence on the children’s relationship with their father under two best interest factors. The Court of Appeals found no error:

“[T]he factors have some natural overlap....We conclude that, in order to accurately assess under factor (a) the emotional ties between the parties and the children, the trial court was free to consider defendant’s influence on plaintiff’s relationship with the children even though that evidence was also relevant under factor (j). We likewise find no merit in defendant’s assertion that the trial court placed undue emphasis on this evidence.” 229 Mich App at 24–25.

4.3 Applying Domestic Violence as a Best Interest Factor

The following discussion addresses the concerns that arise in applying best interest factors (k) and (j) in cases involving domestic violence.

A. Factor (k)—Domestic Violence

As MCL 722.23(k); MSA 25.312(3)(k) recognizes, domestic violence is clearly relevant to the child’s best interest in a proceeding under the Child Custody Act.* Children are affected by adult domestic violence in several ways: 1) they witness it; 2) they are used by the abuser to control the victim; and, 3) they suffer physical consequences incident to the adult violence.

*See Section 1.8 for more on the effects of adult intimate violence on children.

Children so exposed to domestic violence can suffer devastating physical, emotional, cognitive, and behavioral effects that may be carried into their adult lives.

Note: Factor (k) makes no distinction between domestic violence occurring between a child’s biological parents and domestic violence occurring between a child’s biological parent and the parent’s new partner.

As of the publication date of this Resource Book, the Michigan appellate courts have not provided significant guidance for trial courts in applying factor (k).

- F Although factor (k) was not at issue in Winn v Winn, 234 Mich App 255 260, n 4 (1999), the Court of Appeals remarked in a footnote that “the isolated instances in which plaintiff allegedly argued with defendant do not support a finding of domestic violence.”
- F In Hilliard v Schmidt, 231 Mich App 316, 325–326 (1998), the mother of two sons alleged physical abuse by the father, which the father denied. No other evidence corroborated the mother’s allegations. The mother admitted she had hit the older son, and there was evidence that she had accidentally thrown hot water on him. There was no evidence that either party had been abusive toward the younger son. The Court of Appeals upheld the trial court’s finding that the parties were equal regarding factor (k), commenting only that the finding “was not against the great weight of the evidence. 231 Mich App at 326.
- F In Ireland v Smith, 214 Mich App 235, 248 (1995), modified by 451 Mich 457 (1996), the trial court was presented with “vastly conflicting evidence” on factor (k) and found the parties neutral, commenting that domestic violence was “not pertinent here.” The nature of the “vastly conflicting evidence” was not explained in the Court of Appeals’ opinion. Although it reversed the trial court’s order for custody based on factor (e), the Court of Appeals agreed with the trial court’s finding of neutrality on factor (k). The Court noted, however, that “the trial court’s choice of words” regarding domestic violence was “unfortunate.”

In 1994, the Board of Trustees of the National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges approved a Model State Code on Domestic and Family Violence that can offer some guidance with respect to domestic violence as a factor in determining custody and parenting time (referred to as “visitation” in the Code).^{*} Section 402 of the Model Code provides as follows:

“1. In addition to other factors that a court must consider in a proceeding in which the custody of a child or visitation by a parent is at issue and in which the court has made a finding of domestic or family violence:

^{*}The Model State Code is an educational and advisory document only. Michigan courts are not required to consider or follow it.

(a) The court shall consider as primary the safety and well-being of the child and of the parent who is the victim of domestic or family violence.

(b) The court shall consider the perpetrator's history of causing physical harm, bodily injury, assault, or causing reasonable fear of physical harm, bodily injury, or assault, to another person.

“2. If a parent is absent or relocates because of an act of domestic or family violence by the other parent, the absence or relocation is not a factor that weighs against the parent in determining custody or visitation.”

The foregoing provisions focus on three areas:

F Safety

The Commentary to Section 402 explains that paragraph 1(a) “contemplates that no custodial or visitation award may properly issue that jeopardizes the safety and well-being of adult and child victims.”

F The history and patterns of abuse

The Model Code drafters recognize that domestic violence is a pattern of controlling behavior rather than any single action, and that abusers may direct their violent acts against persons other than the victim (e.g., children, friends, relatives) in order to exercise control over the victim.* Accordingly courts are urged to take the history and context of acts of abuse into account when making custody and parenting time determinations. Regarding paragraph 1(b), the Commentary states:

“Paragraph (b) compels courts to consider the history, both the acts and patterns, of physical abuse inflicted by the abuser on other persons, including but not limited to the child and the abused parent, as well as the fear of physical harm reasonably engendered by this conduct. It recognizes that discreet [sic] acts of abuse do not accurately convey the risk of continuing violence, the likely severity of future abuse, or the magnitude of fear precipitated by the composite picture of violent conduct.”

F Victim flight

The Commentary to Section 402 of the Model Code addresses the issue of parental flight from abuse as follows:*

“Subsection 2 recognizes that sometimes abused adults flee the family home in order to preserve or protect their lives and sometimes do not take dependent children with them because of the emergency circumstances of flight, because the lack resources to provide for the children

*See Sections 1.2–1.4 for a discussion of the nature of domestic violence.

*More discussion about parental flight appears at Sections 4.11 and 8.5.

outside the family home, or because they conclude that the abuser will hurt the children, the abused parent, or third parties if the children are removed prior to court intervention. This provision prevents the abuser from benefiting from the violent or coercive conduct precipitating the relocation of the battered parent and affords the abused parent an affirmative defense to the allegation of child abandonment.”

Regarding flight from abuse, MCL 722.27a(6)(h); MSA 25.312(7a)(6)(h) provides that “[a] custodial parent’s temporary residence with the child in a domestic violence shelter shall not be construed as evidence of the custodial parent’s intent to retain or conceal the child from the other parent.” For further discussion of this statute, see Section 8.5(B).

B. Factor (j)—The “Friendly Parent” Factor

The “friendly parent” factor, i.e., the “willingness and ability of each of the parties to facilitate and encourage a close and continuing parent-child relationship between the child and the other parent,” gives an advantage to the parent who appears most likely to promote continuing contact. This factor is based on the general assumption that having limited contact with one or both parents can result in a child experiencing adjustment difficulties after the parents separate. Michigan Custody Evaluation Model, supra, p 36.

When applying factor (j) in a case involving domestic violence, however, the assumption on which the factor is based must be carefully examined. Although contact with both parents can help children from non-violent families better adjust to a divorce, such contact may be more harmful than helpful in situations involving domestic violence. Research has shown that where domestic violence is present, the post-separation adjustment of children is facilitated by awarding sole custody to a non-abusive parent who offers a warm relationship, provides a predictable routine, imposes consistent, moderate discipline, and buffers the child against parental conflict and abuse. Appendix III to the Model Code on Domestic and Family Violence (National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges, 1994), citing Kelly, Parental Conflict: Taking the Higher Road, in Family Advocate (Winter, 1992), Furstenberg and Cherlin, Divided Families: What Happens to Children When Parents Part (Harvard University Press, 1991), and Wallerstein and Blakeslee, Second Chances: Men, Women, and Children a Decade After Divorce (Tichknor and Fields, 1990).

Moreover, domestic violence experts note with concern that when applied without regard to the presence of domestic violence in a relationship, “friendly parent” provisions such as factor (j) may impose an impossible situation upon a victim who opposes shared custody arrangements out of fear of further victimization, ultimately rewarding the abuser:

“[F]ew courts even ask a mother why she may be discouraging the father’s access to the children....Every abused mother walks a tightrope. On the one hand, she must protect her children at the risk of the state’s removing them or her being criminally prosecuted if she fails to protect them. On the other hand, she risks losing custody to her abuser if she protects her children by restricting the abuser’s access to them. Friendly parent provisions punish her and the children if she even raises concerns about his fitness or parenting ability (or...if she opposes joint custody) because her very concern can be used as a weapon against her to deny her custody. Friendly parent provisions actually encourage abusers to continue to use the children as pawns in custody fights because even false allegations that a father was denied access to the children frequently result in the abuser’s winning custody. Thus, friendly parent provisions, rather than being the benevolent facilitator of better parenting, actually have the likely effect of rewarding the less fit parent with sole custody.

“[W]ell-intentioned efforts to promote better parenting through the use of friendly parent provisions and court orders providing that neither parent should disparage the other parent in front of the children have the unintentional results of keeping the abuse secret, reinforcing the abuser’s right to perpetuate the violence, not holding the abuser responsible for his abuse (the first necessary step before he can recover), further victimizing the abused parent and greatly increasing the chance that the children will be permanently psychologically abused and become abusers as adults.” Zorza, Protecting the Children in Custody Disputes When One Parent Abuses the Other, 29 Clearinghouse Review, 1113, 1122–1123 (April, 1996).

As of the publication date of this Resource Book, the Michigan appellate courts have not extensively discussed factor (j) in a context involving domestic violence. In Bowers v Bowers, 198 Mich App 320 (1993), the testimony in a proceeding to modify a custody order showed that the father threatened, berated, and insulted the mother in front of the children. Based partly on this testimony, the Court of Appeals found that factor (j) favored the mother, overturning the trial court’s finding of equality on this factor as “against the great weight of the evidence.” 198 Mich App at 332–333.

Note: The Michigan Court of Appeals has held that a finding against a parent under factor (j) does not necessarily outweigh findings in favor of that parent on other factors. See McCain v McCain, 229 Mich App 123 (1998), discussed in Section 4.2.

4.4 Criminal Sexual Conduct Precluding an Award of Custody

If one of the parties to a custody dispute has been convicted of criminal sexual conduct, the Child Custody Act may preclude that party from obtaining custody of a child conceived during or victimized by the abuse.

MCL 722.25(2); MSA 25.312(5)(2) provides that if a child is conceived as the result of acts for which one of the child's biological parents is convicted of first-, second-, third-, or fourth-degree criminal sexual conduct or assault with intent to commit criminal sexual conduct,* the court shall not award custody of the child to the convicted biological parent. This absolute prohibition does not apply if:

- F The conviction was for consensual sexual penetration (third-degree criminal sexual conduct) under MCL 750.520d(1)(a); MSA 28.788(4)(1)(a), involving a victim at least 13 years of age and under 16 years of age; or,
- F After the date of the conviction, the biological parents cohabit and establish a mutual custodial environment for the child.

MCL 722.25(3); MSA 25.312(5)(3) provides that if one of the parties to a child custody dispute is convicted of criminal sexual conduct against his or her own child,* the court shall not award that party custody of the child or a sibling of the child without obtaining the consent of:

- F The child's other parent; and,
- F The child or sibling, if the court considers the child or sibling to be of sufficient age to express his or her desires.

Note: Provisions substantially similar to those in the foregoing statute appear in the parenting time provisions of MCL 722.27a(5); MSA 25.312(7a)(5).* In Devormer v Devormer, 240 Mich App 601 (2000), the Court of Appeals held that MCL 722.27a(5); MSA 25.312(7a)(5) did not apply to preclude the defendant father from parenting time with his son after the father was convicted of criminal sexual conduct against his stepdaughter, who was the plaintiff mother's daughter and the son's half-sister. The Court held that the victim of the defendant's crime (i.e., the stepdaughter) was not his "child" for purposes of the statute. The Court reversed the trial court's decision to deny parenting time to the defendant based on the statute, and remanded the case for a determination whether parenting time would be in the son's best interest.

*These offenses are defined in MCL 750.520b to 750.520e and 750.520g; MSA 28.788(2) to 28.788(5) and 28.788(7).

*The relevant offenses are the same as those set forth in MCL 722.25(2); MSA 25.312(5)(2).

*See Section 4.7(A) on parenting time.

4.5 Joint Custody

Under MCL 722.26a(7); MSA 25.312(6a)(7) “joint custody” refers to court orders specifying:

“(a) That the child shall reside alternately for specific periods with each of the parents [and/or]

“(b) That the parents shall share decision-making authority as to the important decisions affecting the welfare of the child.”

MCL 722.26a; MSA 25.312(6a) contains the following standard for issuing an order for joint custody:

“(1) In custody disputes between parents, the parents shall be advised of joint custody. At the request of either parent, the court shall consider an award of joint custody, and shall state on the record the reasons for granting or denying a request.* In other cases joint custody may be considered by the court. The court shall determine whether joint custody is in the best interest of the child by considering the following factors:

(a) The [best interest] factors enumerated in [MCL 722.23; MSA 25.312(3)].

(b) Whether the parents will be able to cooperate and generally agree concerning important decisions affecting the welfare of the child.

“(2) If the parents agree on joint custody, the court shall award joint custody unless the court determines on the record, based upon clear and convincing evidence, that joint custody is not in the best interests of the child.”

MCL 722.26a; MSA 25.312(6a) creates no presumption in favor of joint custody. Wellman v Wellman, 203 Mich App 277, 286 (1994). However, the statute encourages joint custody awards by requiring courts to notify the parties of this option, and by requiring “clear and convincing evidence” to overcome the parties’ agreement on joint custody.

In cases where domestic violence is present, joint custody awards raise serious concerns over the safety of the victim and the welfare of the parties’ children. The Model State Code on Domestic and Family Violence approved in 1994 by the Board of Trustees of the National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges* provides the following presumptions concerning custody in cases involving domestic violence:

*When a parent requests joint custody, the court must apply the statutory best interest factors, and state the reasons for denying the request on the record. Mixon v Mixon, 237 Mich App 159, 163 (1999).

*The Model State Code is an educational and advisory document only. Michigan courts are not required to consider or follow it.

F Rebuttable presumption against joint custody or sole custody to the abusive parent:

“In every proceeding where there is at issue a dispute as to the custody of a child, a determination by the court that domestic or family violence has occurred raises a rebuttable presumption that it is detrimental to the child and not in the best interest of the child to be placed in sole custody, joint legal custody, or joint physical custody with the perpetrator of family violence.” Model Code, Section 401.

F Rebuttable presumption in favor of residence with the non-abusive parent:

“In every proceeding where there is at issue a dispute as to the custody of a child, a determination by a court that domestic or family violence has occurred raises a rebuttable presumption that it is in the best interest of the child to reside with the parent who is not a perpetrator of domestic or family violence in the location of that parent’s choice, within or outside the state.” Model Code, Section 403.

Although Michigan has not adopted the presumptions contained in the foregoing Model Code provisions, it can address the concerns that form the basis for these presumptions within the context of the joint custody statute (MCL 722.26a; MSA 25.312(6a)). The joint custody statute requires the court to consider:

- F The best interest factors of MCL 722.23; MSA 25.312(3); and,
- F The parties’ ability to “cooperate and generally agree concerning important decisions affecting the welfare of the child.”

A. The Best Interests of the Child in Joint Custody Determinations

In deciding whether joint custody is appropriate, MCL 722.26a(1)(a); MSA 25.312(6a)(1)(a) requires a trial court to consider the best interest factors in MCL 722.23; MSA 25.312(3). In cases involving allegations of domestic violence, factors (j) (“the willingness and ability of each of the parties to facilitate and encourage a close and continuing parent-child relationship...”) and (k) (domestic violence) are particularly relevant.*

*For a discussion of how these best interest factors are weighed and applied, see also Sections 4.2–4.3.

With respect to best interest factor (j), some researchers who study the effects of divorce on children have found that joint custody is appropriate for parents who are: 1) committed to making it work out of love for their children; 2) willing and able to negotiate differences; and, 3) able to separate their spousal roles from their parental roles. Because relationships where domestic violence is present rarely exhibit such characteristics, these researchers advise against joint custody arrangements for them.*

Best interest factor (k) requires the court to consider whether an award of joint custody will result in a child's continued exposure to domestic violence. The effects of adult domestic violence on children who are exposed to it are well-documented by researchers, and summarized in Section 1.8. Some commentators caution that continued aggression and violence between divorced spouses with joint custody has the most adverse consequences for children of any custody option. It can result in the short term in emotional and physical problems leading to poor school performance, running away, and delinquency. In the long term, it can result in the children themselves becoming caught in the cycle of violence.*

Joint custody also raises safety concerns in cases involving domestic violence because it may create opportunities for continued abuse. Without intervention addressing the violence, divorce or separation is not likely to end the potential for abuse, particularly if the parties are required to have cooperative contact with one another in order to comply with a court order for joint custody. Indeed, violence may escalate after the parties separate as the abusive party seeks to reassert control in the relationship.*

Note: If the court decides that joint custody is not appropriate due to parental conflict, it will have to determine which parent should be awarded sole custody. Some commentators have pointed out that parents who oppose joint custody may risk being labelled “unwilling...to facilitate a close and continuing parent-child relationship” under best interest factor (j), and thus be placed at a disadvantage with respect to the court's determination as to sole custody. This risk of being characterized as an “unfriendly parent” may lead some parties to acquiesce to unsafe joint custody arrangements.* Best interest factor (j) is only one of 12 factors for the court to consider in making its custody determinations, however. If a party's opposition to joint custody is motivated by fear of abuse at the hands of the other party, Michigan courts have enough discretion in weighing the best interest factors to reach a safe, equitable outcome. See Section 4.2–4.3 for more discussion on weighing and applying the best interest factors

B. Parental Cooperation

In addition to the best interest factors discussed above, the joint custody statute requires the trial court to consider the parties' ability to “cooperate and generally agree concerning important decisions affecting the welfare of the child.” MCL 722.26a(1)(b); MSA 25.312(6a)(1)(b). There is scant Michigan statutory or appellate case authority addressing the issue of parental cooperation in the context of domestic violence. Researchers studying the dynamics of domestic violence have concluded that cooperation is not a characteristic of its perpetrators:

“Cooperation by a batterer with his wife/partner is an oxymoron. Cooperation, in common practice, means to act or work together for mutual benefit. A batterer is not someone who can cooperate. He understands mutual benefit as synonymous with his exclusive self-interest. His partner’s interests must be subsumed in or subordinate to his own if they are to be recognized....He coerces, intimidates, monitors, or threatens.... Batterers engage in a process of devaluing their wives, which enables them to dismiss her perspective and concerns....Batterers deny that they use coercive tactics, manipulation, and violence....Men who batter, from the moment they use violence or other coercive tactics of control and domination, have relinquished the option of cooperation.” Hart, Gentle Jeopardy: The Further Endangerment of Battered Women and Children in Custody Mediation, 7 Mediation Quarterly 317, 320 (1990). [Citations omitted.]

In cases where cooperation is not possible, requiring the parties to do so can have dangerous and inequitable effects on both the abused party and the children involved. It is not unusual to find the following dangerous situations arising in domestic relations cases where both violence and access to children are at issue:

- F An abusive party uses protracted litigation over access to children as a means to continue asserting power and control over a former partner.
- F An abusive party uses the contact required for the exchange of children as an opportunity for further mental or physical abuse.
- F An abusive party uses children as instruments of abuse, e.g., by conveying threats through children, or by interrogating children about a former partner’s activities.
- F An abusive party abuses or abducts children as a means of asserting power and control a former partner.
- F An abused party who does not feel safe may flee with children to escape an abuser.

As noted above, workable joint custody arrangements require parents who are willing and able to cooperatively negotiate their differences.* Because abusers seek to control rather than to cooperate, relationships where domestic violence is present are poor candidates for joint custody.

*Saunders, supra.

C. Joint Custody Agreements

Joint custody agreements are encouraged under the Child Custody Act. The Act provides that the court may only refuse to issue an order in accordance with the parties' agreement to joint custody if it determines in light of clear and convincing evidence on the record that the terms are not in the best interests of the child. MCL 722.26a(2); MSA 25.312(6a)(2). This statute does not mean that a trial court must uphold the parties' stipulations without making an independent determination as to the best interests of their children, however. In Phillips v Jordan, 241 Mich App 17, 21 (2000), the Court of Appeals stated:

“While trial courts try to encourage parents to work together to come to an agreement regarding custody matters...[t]he trial court cannot blindly accept the stipulation of the parents, but must independently determine what is in the best interests of the child.”

See also Koron v Melendy, 207 Mich App 188, 191 (1994) (“Implicit in the trial court’s acceptance of the parties’ custody and visitation arrangement is the court’s determination that the arrangement struck by the parties is in the child’s best interest.”) and Napora v Napora, 159 Mich App 241, 246 (1986) (“Although stipulations are favored by the judicial system and are generally upheld, a parent may not bargain away a child’s right by agreement with a former spouse.”)

*See Herrell & Hofford, supra, p 20, and Saunders, supra.

It is particularly important that courts make an independent determination of the child’s best interests in cases involving allegations of domestic violence. As discussed in Section 1.8, domestic violence has a profound impact upon children. Moreover, stipulations between abused and abusive individuals may not contain mutually-agreed terms. In many relationships where domestic violence is present, there is an unequal balance of power or bargaining capability between the parties. In some cases, the imbalance may be so great that the abused individual’s agreement to joint custody will be the product of coercion or fearful acquiescence. The abused individual may agree to an unsafe joint custody arrangement under threat of physical violence, or out of fear of losing access to children in a trial over sole custody.*

Note: The extent to which a court must make independent best interest findings in cases involving stipulations appears to depend on whether the stipulation is part of the original judgment of divorce or part of a post-judgment modification. On post-judgment agreements to modify custody, a trial court must independently reexamine and make findings on each “best interest” factor. On original judgments of divorce, the trial court need not expressly articulate each of the best interest factors. Koron v Melendy, supra, 207 Mich App at 192.

4.6 Issuing Orders for Parenting Time

Parenting time in cases involving domestic violence is governed by MCL 722.27a; MSA 25.312(7a), which contains the following provisions of particular interest:

- F Parenting time is to be granted “in accordance with the best interests of the child.” A strong relationship with both parents is presumed to be in a child’s best interest, so that absent clear and convincing evidence of danger to the child’s physical, mental, or emotional health, a child has a right to parenting time with a parent. MCL 722.27a(1), (3); MSA 25.312(7a)(1), (3). See also Rozeek v Rozeek, 203 Mich App 193 (1993).
- F In ordering terms for parenting time, the court may consider whether the exercise of parenting time presents a reasonable likelihood of abuse or neglect of the child, or abuse of a parent. MCL 722.27a(6)(c)–(d); MSA 25.312(7a)(6)(c)–(d).
- F Persons convicted of criminal sexual conduct may in some cases be denied parenting time with children conceived during or victimized by the offense. MCL 722.27a(4)–(5); MSA 25.312(7a)(4)–(5).

Under the foregoing provisions, the presence of domestic violence will not preclude a court from ordering parenting time unless:

- F There is clear and convincing evidence of danger to the child’s physical, mental, or emotional health, MCL 722.27a(3); MSA 25.312(7a)(3).; or,
- F The parenting time would be with a parent convicted of criminal sexual conduct, under the circumstances set forth in MCL 722.27a(4)–(5); MSA 25.312(7a)(4)–(5).

This section will address cases in which there are no facts present that would preclude a court from ordering parenting time under MCL 722.27a(3)–(5); MSA 25.312(7a)(3)–(5). The topics covered include domestic violence as a best interest factor and parenting time terms that promote safety, fairness, and accountability. This section also includes a sample parenting time questionnaire for the parties and sample parenting time provisions.

Cases in which parenting time would be precluded under MCL 722.27a(3)–(5); MSA 25.312(7a)(3)–(5) are discussed in Section 4.7.

A. Domestic Violence as a Factor in Granting Parenting Time

Domestic violence “regardless of whether...directed against or witnessed by the child,” is clearly relevant to a child’s well-being, and is listed in MCL 722.23(k); MSA 25.312(3)(k) as one of 12 factors to be considered in the court's "best interest" determination. In weighing the 12 best interest factors, no single factor raises any presumption with respect to the court's determination; all relevant factors are to be considered together to reach a "sum total." For a complete discussion of how courts are to weigh and apply the statutory "best interest" factors, see Section 4.2–4.3.

Note: When parenting time is the only issue in a child custody dispute, a trial court must evaluate and make specific findings only on those best interest factors contested by the parties, not necessarily on all factors. Hoffman v Hoffman, 119 Mich App 79, 83 (1982).

In addition to the "best interest" factors in MCL 722.23; MSA 25.312(3), the parenting time statute contains a basic general presumption that it is in the best interests of a child to have "a strong relationship with both of his or her parents." MCL 722.27a(1); MSA 25.312(7a)(1). The statute further provides that "[a] child has a right to parenting time with a parent." MCL 722.27a(3); MSA 25.312(7a)(3). Therefore, unless a statutory exception applies (for cases involving danger to the child or criminal sexual conduct), the court must grant parenting time "in a frequency, duration, and type reasonably calculated to promote a strong relationship between the child and the parent granted parenting time." MCL 722.27a(1); MSA 25.312(7a)(1). The parenting time statute allows the court flexibility to tailor the terms of its order to address the needs of the parties and the child.

As of the publication date of this Resource Book, no Michigan appellate decisions had directly addressed the role of domestic violence as a "best interest" factor in granting parenting time. Some commentators have noted that court orders for parenting time in cases involving domestic violence are subject to the same concerns that arise with regard to orders for joint custody, namely:*

- F An abuser's exercise of parenting time can pose potential danger to a child or former intimate partner. Abusers may use parenting time as a tool for emotional abuse. They may, for example, institute disputes over parenting time as a means to harass a former partner, or they may use parenting time as an opportunity to recruit the children to collect information about the former partner. Furthermore, parenting time can give abusers physical access to children and former partners, which creates opportunities for physical abuse.
- F Continued aggression and violence between divorced spouses has adverse consequences for children. It can result in the short term in emotional and physical problems leading to poor school performance, running away, and delinquency. In the long term, it can result in the children themselves becoming caught in the cycle of violence.
- F Without appropriate intervention an abusive individual is at risk to be abusive in subsequent relationships, thus subjecting the children to continuing exposure to domestic violence.

*Lemon, Domestic Violence & Children: Resolving Custody & Visitation Disputes, p 57–59 (Family Violence Prevention Fund, 1995). See Section 4.5 on joint custody, and 1.6 on abusive tactics.

In response to the foregoing concerns, the Board of Trustees of the National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges approved the following provision, which appears in the Model Code on Domestic and Family Violence (1994):*

“A court may award visitation by a parent who committed domestic or family violence only if the court finds that adequate provision for the safety of the child and the parent who is a victim of domestic or family violence can be made.” Model Code, Section 405(1).

The commentary to this provision states:

“The Model Code posits that where protective interventions are not accessible in a community, a court should not endanger a child or adult victim of domestic violence in order to accommodate visitation by a perpetrator of domestic or family violence. The risk of domestic violence directed both towards the child and the battered parent is frequently greater after separation than during cohabitation; this elevated risk often continues after legal interventions.”

The following discussion addresses how courts can craft parenting time orders that promote safety, fairness and accountability.

B. Terms for Parenting Time

The parenting time statute gives the court great flexibility to order parenting time terms. If carefully and specifically drafted in accordance with the statute, a parenting time order can promote safety as it encourages a child’s relationship with both parents.

MCL 722.27a(6); MSA 25.312(7a)(6) lists nine factors for the court to consider in determining the frequency, duration, and type of parenting time to be granted. Three of these factors require the court to determine the reasonable likelihood of abuse against a child or a parent resulting from the exercise of parenting time. The nine factors are:

“(a) The existence of any special circumstances or needs of the child.

“(b) Whether the child is a nursing child less than 6 months of age, or less than 1 year of age if the child receives substantial nutrition through nursing.

“(c) The reasonable likelihood of abuse or neglect of the child during parenting time.

*The Model State Code is an educational and advisory document only. Michigan courts are not required to consider or follow it.

*See Sections 4.11 and 8.5 on parental kidnapping.

“(d) The reasonable likelihood of abuse of a parent resulting from the exercise of parenting time.

“(e) The inconvenience to, and burdensome impact or effect on, the child of traveling for purposes of parenting time.

“(f) Whether a parent can reasonably be expected to exercise parenting time in accordance with the court order.

“(g) Whether a parent has frequently failed to exercise reasonable parenting time.

“(h) *The threatened or actual detention of the child with the intent to retain or conceal the child from the other parent or from a third person who has legal custody. A custodial parent’s temporary residence with the child in a domestic violence shelter shall not be construed as evidence of the custodial parent’s intent to retain or conceal the child from the other parent.

“(i) Any other relevant factors.” [Emphasis added.]

For a case illustrating the application of these factors, see Booth v Booth, 194 Mich App 284, 292–293 (1992). At a bench trial in this divorce action, the plaintiff wife testified that the defendant had physically abused their son when he was an infant and emotionally abused her. She also testified that the defendant had been jailed for physically abusing her. Defendant denied the physical abuse of his wife, although he admitted hitting his son at age five as a disciplinary measure. The trial court awarded the parties joint legal custody of the parties’ two children, with sole physical custody to plaintiff. Defendant was granted supervised visitation with the children. Among other issues raised on appeal, defendant asserted that the trial court erroneously ordered supervised visitation. The Court of Appeals upheld the order for visitation, noting that the trial court properly considered the likelihood of abuse or neglect under the applicable statute in determining the frequency, duration, and type of visitation.

In drafting an order for parenting time in cases where domestic violence is present, the court can promote safety by making its order highly specific. Clear, precise parenting time terms are more readily enforced by law enforcement officers, and are more difficult for the parties to manipulate. The court may issue precise orders under MCL 722.27a(7)–(8); MSA 25.312(7a)(7)–(8), which permit either party to request at any time that parenting time be granted in specific terms, and authorize the court to order “any reasonable terms or conditions that facilitate the orderly and meaningful exercise of parenting time by a parent....” Under MCL 722.27a(8); MSA 25.312(7a)(8), specific terms for parenting time may include one or more of the following:

- “(a) Division of the responsibility to transport the child.
- “(b) Division of the cost of transporting the child.
- “(c) Restrictions on the presence of third persons during parenting time.
- “(d) Requirements that the child be ready for parenting time at a specific time.
- “(e) Requirements that the parent arrive for parenting time and return the child from parenting time at specific times.
- “(f) Requirements that parenting time occur in the presence of a third person or agency.
- “(g) Requirements that a party post a bond to assure compliance with a parenting time order.
- “(h) Requirements of reasonable notice when parenting time will not occur.
- “(i) Any other reasonable condition determined to be appropriate in the particular case.”

Consistent with MCL 722.27a(8); MSA 25.312(7a)(8), the court might consider the following terms to enhance safe enforcement of its orders for parenting time in cases involving domestic violence:*

- F Avoid non-specific provisions such as “reasonable parenting time,” “parenting time as agreed by the parties,” or “parenting time to be arranged later.” The terms of a parenting time order should be stated unambiguously, with pick-up and drop-off locations, times, and days of the week clearly specified.
- F Provide for supervised parenting time, with the supervising third-parties clearly identified. Establish conditions that clearly specify the responsibilities and authority of the supervisor during supervised parenting time. Order the abusive party to pay a fee to defray the costs. See Section 4.8 for more discussion of supervised parenting time.
- F Provide safe, neutral locations for parenting time, whether supervised or unsupervised.
- F Specify how the parties may communicate with each other to make arrangements for parenting time (e.g., whether the parties or their attorneys may communicate by telephone, or whether written or electronic communication is permitted).

*Many of these suggestions are from Finn & Colson, Civil Protection Orders: Legislation, Current Court Practice, & Enforcement, p. 43 (Nat’l Inst of Justice, 1990), and Family Violence: A Model State Code, Section 405 (Nat’l Council of Juvenile & Family Court Judges, 1994).

- F Arrange parenting time so that the parties will not meet. Drop-off and pick-up times could be different for each party, so that one will have left the drop-off site before the other arrives.
- F If the parties must meet to transfer children, require that the transfer take place in the presence of a third party and in a protected setting, such as a police station or public place.
- F Start with short, daytime visits in a public place, and increase length only if things are going well. Place limits on overnight visits.
- F Prohibit the noncustodial party from drinking or using drugs before or during parenting time.
- F Require a bond to assure compliance with the court's order.
- F Limit the abusive party's access to firearms. For a discussion of firearms restrictions in cases involving domestic violence, see Lovik, Domestic Violence: A Guide to Civil and Criminal Proceedings, ch 10 (MJJ, 1998).
- F Permit refusal of parenting time upon violation of any condition the court imposes.
- F Permit cancellation of parenting time if the noncustodial party is more than a specified number of minutes late.
- F Specify the consequences of violating the court's order, and the steps that the aggrieved party should take in the event of a violation.
- F Specify how disputes between the parties will be resolved.
- F Assess whether one of the parties is at risk for abducting or fleeing with the children, and take steps to deter such behavior. For more information, see Section 4.11.
- F Order the abusive party to successfully complete a batterer intervention program as a condition of parenting time. See Sections 3.3–3.4 for more information about such programs.
- F If the abused parent is in hiding from the abuser, keep the address of the abused parent and other identifying information confidential. See Sections 2.13–2.14 for more information about this subject.
- F Build in automatic return dates for the court to review how its order is working.

In cases involving a personal protection order, the State Court Administrative Office's Michigan Parenting Time Guideline (2000) states (at p 26):

“If the parties have a Personal Protection Order, parenting time exchanges shall occur (if permitted by the order) in a manner which ensures the order is not violated. In order to provide appropriate safety when a PPO is in place or when a documented history of abuse exists, all exchanges should occur in a public place, at a designated neutral exchange site, by a third party, or at a supervised parenting time facility.”*

Section 405(4) of the Model Code on Domestic and Family Violence states that the court may refer, but shall not order, an abused parent to attend counseling relating to the abuse, either individually or with the abuser, as a condition of custody or parenting time. This provision recognizes that joint counseling with the perpetrator of domestic violence can be dangerous for the victim.* The commentary to Section 405(4) notes that this provision does not preclude the court from ordering other types of counseling, such as substance abuse counseling or educational classes.

To expedite the issuance of parenting time orders, some commentators suggest providing the abused party with a short form questionnaire on which to record preferred arrangements.* For sample questions, see Section 4.6(C). Examples of specifically-worded parenting time terms appear at Section 4.6(D).

If the parties agree to parenting time terms, the court may only refuse to issue an order in accordance with their agreement if it determines in light of clear and convincing evidence on the record that the terms are not in the best interests of the child. MCL 722.27a(2); MSA 25.312(7a)(2). When applying this subsection to a case involving domestic violence, the court can promote safety and the best interests of the children by making careful inquiry into whether the parties have truly reached an agreement. When domestic violence is present, there is often an unequal balance of power or bargaining capability between the parties; in some cases, the imbalance may be so great that the victim’s agreement to parenting time terms will be the product of coercion.*

C. Sample Parenting Time Questionnaire

Note: The following questions are taken from Finn and Colson, Civil Protection Orders: Legislation, Current Court Practice, and Enforcement, p 45 (Nat’l Inst of Justice, 1990). Although these questions are suggested in the context of civil protection order proceedings, they are also relevant to the issuance of parenting time orders.

To assist the court in issuing its order for parenting time, please answer the following questions:

*See Section 4.8 on supervised parenting time. See Section 7.12 for more on PPOs and access to children.

*Joint counseling is contra-indicated in cases involving domestic violence. See Section 1.4(B) for more discussion.

*See Saunders, Child Custody Decisions in Families Experiencing Woman Abuse, 39 Social Work 51, 56 (1994), and Herrell & Hofford, Family Violence: Improving Court Practice, 41 Juvenile & Family Court J 20 (1990).

- F Do you believe that it may be dangerous for your child(ren) if your former spouse/partner is allowed to visit with them? If so, why may it be dangerous?
- F Is there a safe place for your former spouse/partner to pick up the children?
 - Your home?
 - Your parents' home?
 - Church, synagogue, or other place of worship?
 - Police station?
 - Other? (fill in)_____
- F Do you want someone else to be present when your former spouse/partner is with the children, such as grandparents or a clergy person? If so, who?
- F When do you want your former spouse/partner to be able to visit with the children?
 - What day(s) of the week?
 - What time of day? From___ to___
 - How many times each month?
- F Does your former spouse/partner have a drinking or drug problem? If so, do you want the order to provide that your former spouse/partner cannot visit with the children after drinking or taking drugs?
- F Does your former spouse/partner carry or have access to weapons? If so, do you want the order to provide that your former spouse/partner cannot carry a weapon while visiting the children, or that visits with the children take place in a location where your former spouse/partner will have no access to weapons?

D. Examples of Specifically-Worded Parenting Time Terms

The following terms are adapted from Lemon, Domestic Violence and Children: Resolving Custody and Visitation Disputes, Appendix J (Family Violence Prevention Fund, 1995). The examples are drafted in the assumption that the abused individual is the plaintiff, the abuser is the defendant, and Mary Smith is a neutral third party.

- 1) Parenting time shall take place every first and third Saturday from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., at the home of and in the presence of Mary Smith, plaintiff's aunt, at 123 Main Street, City. The plaintiff is responsible for dropping off the child by 9:45 a.m. and picking up the child at 3:15 p.m. If parenting time cannot take place, notice must be given by telephoning Mary Smith at (000) 123-4567 by 8:30 a.m., and parenting time shall then take place the following Saturday with the same provisions.

- 2) If defendant wishes to exercise parenting time rights, he must call Mary Smith at (000) 123-4567 by 10 a.m. the day before a scheduled visit. Mary Smith shall then call the plaintiff.
- 3) Defendant shall consume no alcohol or illegal drugs during the 12 hours prior to and during parenting time. If he appears to have violated this provision, Mary Smith is authorized to deny him parenting time that week.
- 4) Parenting time may be denied if the defendant is more than 30 minutes late and does not call by 8:30 a.m. to alert Mary Smith to this. (This term prevents a custodial parent and child from waiting for the other parent.)
- 5) Plaintiff must arrive at the drop-off location 20 minutes before defendant, and then leave before defendant arrives. At the end of parenting time defendant must remain at the location for 20 minutes while plaintiff leaves with the children. (This term prevents defendant from following plaintiff to harass her or ascertain the location of her new residence.)
- 6) (If there is no third party available, even for exchanging the children): Drop-off and pick-up of the children shall occur at the local police department, in the lobby. Defendant shall leave with the children immediately; plaintiff may request a police escort to her car or to public transportation. At the end of parenting time, defendant shall wait in the lobby at least 20 minutes while plaintiff leaves with the children. (This term prevents defendant from following plaintiff to harass her or ascertain the location of her new residence.)

For an example of a parenting time order with provisions designed to prevent abduction to a foreign nation, see Farrell v Farrell, 133 Mich App 502, 513, n 3 (1984).

4.7 Grounds for Denying Parenting Time

A. Criminal Sexual Conduct by a Parent

MCL 722.27a(4); MSA 25.312(7a)(4) provides that if a child is conceived as the result of acts for which one of the child's biological parents is convicted of first-, second-, third-, or fourth-degree criminal sexual conduct or assault with intent to commit criminal sexual conduct,* the court shall not grant parenting time with the child to the convicted biological parent. This absolute prohibition does not apply if:

*These offenses are defined in MCL 750.520b to 750.520e and 750.520g; MSA 28.788(2) to 28.788(5) and 28.788(7).

*These offenses are the same as those set forth in MCL 722.27a(4); MSA 25.312(7a)(4).

F The conviction was for consensual sexual penetration (third-degree criminal sexual conduct) under MCL 750.520d(1)(a); MSA 28.788(4)(1)(a), involving a victim at least 13 years of age and under 16 years of age; or,

F After the date of the conviction, the biological parents cohabit and establish a mutual custodial environment for the child.

MCL 722.27a(5); MSA 25.312(7a)(5) provides that if an individual is convicted of first-, second-, third-, or fourth-degree criminal sexual conduct or assault with intent to commit criminal sexual conduct,* and the victim is the individual’s child, the court shall not grant parenting time with that child or a sibling of that child without obtaining the consent of:

F The child’s other parent; and,

F The child or sibling, if the court considers the child or sibling to be of sufficient age to express his or her desires.

In Devormer v Devormer, 240 Mich App 601 (2000), the Court of Appeals held that MCL 722.27a(5); MSA 25.312(7a)(5) did not apply to preclude the defendant father from parenting time with his son after the father was convicted of criminal sexual conduct against his stepdaughter, who was the plaintiff mother’s daughter and the son’s half-sister. The Court held that the victim of the defendant’s crime (i.e., the stepdaughter) was not his “child” for purposes of the statute. The Court reversed the trial court’s decision to deny parenting time to the defendant based on the statute, and remanded the case for a determination whether parenting time would be in the son’s best interest.

B. Danger to the Child’s Physical, Mental, or Emotional Health

*See Section 1.8 on the effects of domestic violence on children.

MCL 722.27a(3); MSA 25.312(7a)(3) provides that a child has a right to parenting time, “unless it is shown on the record by clear and convincing evidence that it would endanger the child’s physical, mental, or emotional health.”* As of the publication date of this Resource Book, no Michigan appellate decisions have directly considered the issue of denying parenting time based upon this statutory provision.

In Rozek v Rozek, 203 Mich App 193, 194–195 (1993), the Court of Appeals considered MCL 722.27a(3); MSA 25.312(7a)(3) on the issue of the standard of proof needed to show an endangerment of a child’s physical, mental, or emotional health. After concluding the trial court improperly used a “preponderance of the evidence” standard rather than the required “clear and convincing evidence” standard, the Court remanded the matter to the trial court for a new hearing. The Court would not express an opinion on whether the record would have supported the trial court’s termination of the father’s parenting time under the proper standard of proof. It did, however, note that the statute permits a court to order parenting time with a multitude of terms and conditions to best protect and serve the interests of the child.

4.8 Supervised Parenting Time

Supervised parenting time is used for many reasons:*

- F If the abusive parent has a history of hostility or violence during pick-up and return of children, supervised parenting time allows protection for abused parents while sending a message to abusers that their behavior is being monitored.
- F Supervised parenting time allows abusers to become clearer in their own minds as to how important it is to see their children, separate from their wishes to have contact with their former partners.
- F If a parent has a drug or alcohol problem, supervised parenting time may promote the safety of the children while they have contact with that parent.
- F Supervised parenting time may work better for parents who have difficulty cooperating with the agreed-upon parenting time arrangements.
- F Supervised parenting time may prevent a parent from abducting a child during parenting time.
- F If the children are in foster care, the parents may prefer to visit them at a supervised parenting time center, rather than under the supervision of the foster parents.

Supervised parenting time can take three forms: third party supervision, therapeutic parenting time, and agency parenting time. The appropriate method of supervision in a particular case depends upon the reason for supervision.*

Third party supervision involves parenting time supervised by a friend, relative, or other individual selected by the court. This type of supervision may be problematic in cases where the presence of domestic violence requires long-term supervision, or supervision by a person with expertise in domestic violence. If third party supervision is used in a case involving domestic violence, family members (particularly the abuser's family members) should not provide supervision. For cases involving a personal protection order, the State Court Administrative Office's Michigan Parenting Time Guideline states (at p 26): "When a PPO is in place and there is a provision for supervised parenting time, it is generally recommended that the supervision be provided by a neutral third party rather than by a party's family member."

Therapeutic parenting time is the process of reaching a parenting time goal using the assistance of therapy. It is appropriately used when the parent and child have not had contact for an extended period, when facilitation of communication between the parent and child is necessary, or when issues in the parent/child relationship need resolution. In cases involving domestic violence, a supervising therapist should have expertise about this subject.

*Rygwelski, Beyond He said/She said, p 77–79 (Mich Coalition Against Domestic Violence, 1995).

*More information on each form of parenting time appears in State Court Administrative Office, Michigan Parenting Time Guideline, p 13–16 (2000).

Administrative
Office, supra, p
14–15.

Agency parenting time occurs at an agency such as a Friend of the Court office, a family and children’s services office, a counseling center, a substance abuse or other treatment center, or a domestic violence service agency. This type of parenting time is commonly used in child abuse cases, substance abuse cases, and cases involving domestic violence, when no other means of protecting a child may be appropriate. Supervised parenting time programs may provide multiple services to separated families in addition to supervision, such as batterer intervention, support groups for abused women, parenting classes, and classes on the effect of family separation on children. Supervised parenting time centers can be used in various ways. Centers can serve as long-term sites for parenting time, or as neutral sites for dropping off and picking up children. Information about supervised parenting time programs can often be obtained by contacting a local domestic violence service agency.*

The State Court Administrative Office’s Michigan Parenting Time Guideline states that a supervised parenting time agency should employ qualified individuals who are capable of enforcing rules designed to ensure the safety of children. The following rules should be considered as requirements for supervised parenting time; additional guidelines may be established by the agency as appropriate in a particular case:*

- F All physical contact between the child and parent must be initiated by the child, unless otherwise approved by the agency.
- F Whispering, speaking in low tones with intent to conceal the conversation, and note-passing must not occur between the child and parent.
- F The parent must not initiate discussion with the child concerning any alleged abuse or use manipulative techniques to extract information from a child.
- F Discussion about adult problems such as court proceedings or parental disagreements are not permitted in front of a child.
- F If a parent wants to give a gift to a child, the parent must discuss it with the supervisor in advance.
- F The language used during parenting time must be one in which the supervisor is fluent.
- F There should be no discussion, derogatory comment, or questioning of the child about the other parent, the other parent’s relationships, or the other parent’s activities.
- F There should be no discussion about future living arrangements or changes in parenting time except as determined in advance between the parent and the agency.
- F A child shall not be used to send any message to the other parent or family member or for the purpose of delivering any communication or document.

- F A child shall not be questioned about where he or she lives or goes to school.
- F All directives and requests from staff shall be followed.
- F All parenting time shall occur only in areas designated for that purpose.
- F No one other than the parent should be present at the center or in any area that is in direct view of the center unless arranged in advance as part of therapy.
- F No drugs or alcohol shall be brought to the agency, nor shall a parent appear at the agency under the influence of drugs or alcohol.

The National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges recommends the creation of formal visitation centers that encourage family contact without allowing violent behavior to continue, citing their effectiveness in reducing the number of allegations of violations:

“The Brockton [Massachusetts] Family and Community Resources reported 105 families using the center during the first nine months of operation and 65 women in these families had restraining orders. Forty-seven of these women reported that their partners had violated the orders before their use of the supervised visitation center and after working with the center for six months, only 17 violations were reported, none of which were for physical assault.” Appendix III, Model Code on Domestic and Family Violence, Section 406 (Nat’l Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges, 1994).

Section 406(2) of the Model Code on Domestic and Family Violence provides:*

“A visitation center must provide:

- a. A secure setting and specialized procedures for supervised visitation and the transfer of children for visitation; and
- b. Supervision by a person trained in security and the avoidance of domestic and family violence.”

The Supervised Visitation Network (“SVN”) is an organization formed in May, 1992 to support the work of supervised child access providers. The SVN has promulgated Standards and Guidelines for Supervised Visitation Network Practice (adopted April 9, 1996 and edited May, 2000). The Standards and Guidelines were developed for SVN members, and focus on quality assurance. SVN Standards and Guidelines, Section 1.2. - F Structure of services (providers, advisory board, conflict of interest, insurance).
- F Administrative functions (financial records, files, statistics).
- F Operations (including resources and functions, services, evaluations, premises, hours of operation).
- F Security (including declining unsafe cases, security arrangements, clinical assessment and client relationship, identity of volunteers and interns, emergency procedures).
- F Supervisor to child ratio.
- F Parental and provider responsibility for the child.
- F Fees (including fees in cases involving family violence or allegations of family violence).
- F Staff (including qualifications, responsibilities, affiliations, consultants, therapeutic supervision).
- F Training.
- F Referrals.
- F Intake (including assessment for family violence).
- F Rules for program participation.
- F Initial familiarization of the child (including special preparation in cases of family violence).
- F Staff preparation for visits (including briefing, drugs/alcohol, activities during supervised visits, inviting others to the visit, conversations with the child, medication, diet, discipline).
- F Interventions during supervised visits (including terminating a supervised visit).
- F Staff functions following visits.
- F Termination of services.
- F Special considerations in situations involving child sexual abuse or partner abuse.
- F Records (including records of visits, protection of information about clients, protection of supervisor's identity).
- F Reports to courts and/or other referring agencies.

F Confidentiality (including subpoenas, parents' rights to review records, requests to observe supervised visits).

4.9 Modifying Michigan Custody Determinations

A. Standard for Modification

MCL 722.27(1)(c); MSA 25.312(7)(1)(c) governs modification of Michigan custody determinations as follows:

“(1) If a child custody dispute has been submitted to the circuit court as an original action under this act or has arisen incidentally from another action in the circuit court or an order or judgment of the circuit court, for the best interests of the child the court may do 1 or more of the following:

* * *

(c) Modify or amend its previous judgments or orders for proper cause shown or because of change of circumstances until the child reaches 18 years of age and, subject to section 4a,* until the child reaches 19 years and 6 months of age. The court shall not modify or amend its previous judgments or orders or issue a new order so as to change the established custodial environment of a child unless there is presented clear and convincing evidence that it is in the best interest of the child. The custodial environment of a child is established if over an appreciable time the child naturally looks to the custodian in that environment for guidance, discipline, the necessities of life, and parental comfort. The age of the child, the physical environment, and the inclination of the custodian and the child as to permanency of the relationship shall also be considered.”

*Section 4a
(MCL 722.24a;
MSA
25.312(4a))
addresses post-
majority child support.

*See Section 7.13 for discussion of the effect of PPOs and other court orders on the established custodial environment.

*The Model State Code is an educational and advisory document only. Michigan courts are not required to consider or follow it.

*See Section 4.2 for more discussion of weighing the “best interest” factors.

Under the foregoing statute, the moving party must make a threshold showing of proper cause or change of circumstances. Once a party has made this showing, the court will determine whether an established custodial environment exists. If no established custodial environment exists, the court will consider whether a preponderance of the evidence indicates that a change of custody would be in the child’s best interests. If an established custodial environment exists, the court will consider whether clear and convincing evidence shows that a change would be in the child’s best interests.* Hayes v Hayes, 209 Mich App 385, 387 (1995); Rossow v Aranda, 206 Mich App 456, 458 (1994).

1. “Proper Cause” or “Change of Circumstances”

As of the publication date of this Resource Book, no Michigan statute or appellate decision directly addresses the relevancy of domestic violence to a party’s threshold showing of “proper cause” or “change of circumstances” under MCL 722.27(1)(c); MSA 25.312(7)(1)(c). However, a showing that a party entered into a stipulation regarding custody as a result of duress or coercion may suffice to establish proper cause for a change of custody. See Rossow v Aranda, supra, 206 Mich App at 457.

Under the Model Code on Domestic and Family Violence, approved in 1994 by the Board of Trustees of the National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges,* a finding of domestic violence occurring since a prior custody determination constitutes a change of circumstances:

“In every proceeding in which there is at issue the modification of an order for custody or visitation of a child, the finding that domestic or family violence has occurred since the last custody determination constitutes a finding of a change of circumstances.”
Model Code, Section 404.

2. Best Interest of the Child

Since 1993, domestic violence has been listed as a best interest factor under MCL 722.23(k); MSA 25.312(3)(k), so that the court must consider it once the party seeking modification makes the threshold showing of “proper cause” or “change of circumstances.”* The following Court of Appeals cases consider violence as a best interest factor in the context of requests for changes in custody. These cases were decided before domestic violence was added to the list of best interest factors in 1993, however.

F Harper v Harper, 199 Mich App 409, 417–419 (1993):

The Court of Appeals in this case upheld the trial court’s decision awarding physical custody of the parties’ two sons to the plaintiff father. According to the evidence presented, the defendant mother struck and shoved the plaintiff many times in the presence of their children. She once forced her way into his truck, and reached through the truck window to slap him. A social worker testified that these incidents of aggression “contributed to the children’s inability at self-control.” 199 Mich App at 419. Another witness, the plaintiff’s 13-year-old daughter, testified that the defendant pressured her to stay with the defendant, and became histrionic when the witness would not do so. This witness further testified that the defendant followed her to her room after a confrontation and threatened to slash her wrists with a razor blade if the witness would not say she loved her. Certain expert testimony showed that the defendant suffered from a borderline personality disorder. Id. There was also evidence of the defendant’s neglect of the children, which the Court of Appeals characterized as “serious lapses of judgment.” 199 Mich App at 417. Based on the evidence presented, the Court of Appeals upheld the trial court’s analysis of the mother’s behavior under factor (g) (the mental and physical health of the parties), in which the trial court found that the defendant’s mental health was inferior to the plaintiff’s.

F Troxler v Troxler, 87 Mich App 520, 524 (1978):

A divorce judgment awarded physical custody of the parties’ three children to their mother. The trial court subsequently granted a motion by the children’s father for a change in physical custody to him. On appeal, a majority of the Court of Appeals found that the evidence supported the trial court’s decision to grant physical custody to the father. The trial court found in favor of the father on stability of environment, permanence of the home as a family unit, and moral fitness. It also found that the children were doing well in school and receiving proper care in their father’s home. The trial court was further influenced by the mother’s testimony that her new husband had struck her and “pretty near knocked her teeth out.” She also testified that the children’s father had sent her a blank check while she was cohabiting with her new husband prior to their marriage, so that she could move out with the children into a place of their own.

Equality on the best interest factors does not preclude the moving party from meeting the clear and convincing burden of proof required to support a change from an established custodial environment. In Heid v AAASulewski (After Remand), 209 Mich App 587, 594–596 (1995), the original divorce judgment awarded joint legal custody of a child to both parents, with sole physical custody to the mother. Following allegations of child abuse, temporary physical custody of the child was granted to the father, with supervised visitation by the mother. The child remained in the father’s temporary physical custody from June, 1990 to April, 1992, during which time the mother severed her relationship with a boyfriend who was suspected of the abuse. In April, 1992, the circuit court determined that both parties should have joint legal and physical custody. The court found that the statutory best interest factors did not significantly favor either party, but that the mother had met her burden to prove by clear and convincing evidence that a change in custody was justified. The circuit court stated:

“[T]he Court [is] convinced that [the mother] is capable of giving love and care to the child and that the good of the child would be better served if both parents had the realization that they were both the legal and physical custodians of the child.” 209 Mich App at 593.

Declining to follow Arndt v Kasem, 135 Mich App 252 (1984), the Court of Appeals in Heid, supra, affirmed the circuit court’s decision. The Court held that a finding of mathematical equality or near equality on the best interest factors set forth in MCL 722.23; MSA 25.312(3) does not necessarily amount to an evidentiary standoff that precludes a party from satisfying the clear and convincing standard of proof required to change an established custodial environment under MCL 722.27(1)(c); MSA 25.312(7)(1)(c). 209 Mich App at 596.

B. Due Process Concerns with Modification Proceedings

A hearing is required before custody can be changed, even on a temporary basis. A trial judge may not decide the issue of custody on the pleadings and the report of the friend of the court when no evidentiary hearing is held. Schlender v Schlender, 235 Mich App 230, 233 (1999), citing Stringer v Vincent, 161 Mich App 429, 432 (1987). See also MCR 3.210(C). The following Michigan cases further explain this due process requirement:

F Mann v Mann, 190 Mich App 526 (1991):

The trial court’s divorce judgment awarded sole physical custody of two minor children to their mother, and joint legal custody to both parents. A year after the judgment was entered, the children’s father petitioned the circuit court to change custody, asserting that illegal activities were being conducted in the mother’s home in the children’s presence. Based on the Friend of the Court’s recommendation, the circuit court entered an “interim” order changing custody to the father, pending a hearing de novo. This de novo hearing was held six months later, and resulted in the court’s final order granting sole legal and physical custody to the father. The mother appealed, asserting among other issues that the circuit court’s “interim” order deprived her of due process.

The Court of Appeals held that the circuit court erred by temporarily changing custody solely on the basis of the Friend of the Court recommendation without first holding a de novo hearing. This conclusion did not, however, compel reversal of the trial court’s final order changing custody, because the de novo hearing was eventually held. The Court of Appeals stated:

“[W]e conclude that in determining whether a temporary change is appropriate or necessary, a hearing must be conducted. Without considering admissible evidence—live testimony, affidavits, documents, or other admissible evidence—a court cannot properly make the determination or make the findings of fact necessary to support its action under §7(1) of the Child Custody Act.” 190 Mich App at 532.

The Court of Appeals' conclusion did not foreclose the possibility that some type of hearing less than a de novo hearing might be appropriate in emergency cases, as long as the court's actions at such a hearing are supported by admissible evidence. The Court stated:

"We recognize that situations might arise in which an immediate change of custody is necessary or compelled for the best interests of the child pending a hearing with regard to a motion for a permanent change of custody....Such a determination, however, can only be made after the court has considered facts established by admissible evidence — whether by affidavits, live testimony, documents, or otherwise. In this regard, we note that circuit court custody disputes and actions 'shall have precedence for hearing and assignment for trial over other civil actions.' MCL 722.26; MSA 25.312(6)." 190 Mich App at 533.

- F Ruppel v Lesner, 127 Mich App 567 (1983), rev'd on other grounds 421 Mich 559 (1984):

The trial court granted temporary custody of a minor child to the child's grandparents following an abbreviated emergency hearing. Both the parents and grandparents were present at the hearing. The trial judge informed all parties that he would only consider whether custody should be changed on a temporary basis, and that the issue of permanent custody would be addressed at a later date, with more testimony being presented, if needed. On appeal from the trial court's order, the parents asserted that they had been denied due process by the abbreviated hearing process.

The Court of Appeals held that the parents had not been denied an opportunity to be heard:

"The concept of due process is flexible and the type of hearing required may be affected by the nature of the case....In the instant case, circumstances dictated that a hearing be held as soon as possible to determine whether [the child] would remain at the juvenile home or live with her grandparents on a temporary basis. The trial court limited the scope of the testimony to the time period immediately preceding the...incident and the incident itself. [The parents] were allowed to cross-examine [the child] and offered the testimony of [the child's] mother....Since [the child] and her mother were the two participants in the incident, given the circumstances, defendants were not denied an opportunity to be heard." 127 Mich App at 575–576.

evidence was presented that a change of custody was in the child's best interest) and Schlender v Schlender supra, 235 Mich App at 233 (A local court's "administrative policy" authorizing a judge to determine without a hearing that a party's evidence was insufficient improperly deprived the party of the right to a hearing on a change of custody).

4.10 Civil Remedies to Enforce Parenting Time Orders

*On criminal sanctions for parental kidnapping, see Section 8.5.

*Upon request, the Friend of the Court office must assist a person in preparing a complaint under the Friend of the Court Act.

Under MCR 3.208(B), the Friend of the Court is responsible to initiate proceedings to enforce orders or judgments for custody or parenting time. Civil remedies to enforce parenting time orders are available under the Friend of the Court Act and the Support and Parenting Time Enforcement Act ("SPTEA").*

Under the Friend of the Court Act, the Friend of the Court office may initiate enforcement proceedings upon its own initiative, and must initiate them upon receipt of a written complaint stating specific facts alleged to constitute a violation.* MCL 552.511(2); MSA 25.176(11)(2). Proceedings are initiated by sending written notice to the person alleged to have violated the court's order. This notice advises the person of the nature of the violation and the proposed action to be taken. The notice further informs the person of the availability of domestic relations mediation and the right to petition for modification of the order. MCL 552.511(3); MSA 25.176(11)(3). After 14 days, MCL 552.511(5); MSA 25.176(11)(5) authorizes the Friend of the Court to do one or more of the following:

- F Schedule a joint meeting with the parties to discuss the allegations of failure to comply with the court's order, for the purpose of attempting to resolve the parties' differences. Absent a court order, there is no requirement that a person attend a joint meeting, and the Friend of the Court office has no authority to impose a solution.
- F If the parties agree, refer them to meet with a domestic relations mediator as provided in MCL 552.517; MSA 25.176(17).
- F If the parties cannot resolve their differences, or if it appears from a documented history of parenting time problems that enforcement under the Friend of the Court Act will not yield productive results, the Friend of the Court office may proceed under the Support and Parenting Time Enforcement Act.

The Support and Parenting Time Enforcement Act, MCL 552.641(1); MSA 25.164(41)(1), requires the Friend of the Court to take one or more of the following actions in a dispute concerning parenting time of a minor child:

- F Apply a makeup parenting time policy under MCL 552.642; MSA 25.164(42).

- F Commence civil contempt proceedings. If a parent fails to appear in response to an order to show cause, the court may issue a bench warrant, and (except for good cause shown on the record) shall order the parent to pay the costs of the hearing, the issuance of the warrant, the arrest, and further hearings. MCL 552.644; MSA 25.164(44) and MCR 3.208(B) govern civil contempt proceedings.
- F Petition the court for modification of the existing parenting time provisions to ensure parenting time, unless contrary to the best interests of the child. The Friend of the Court must submit a written report and recommendation with the petition. See also MCL 552.517d; MSA 25.176(17d) on modification of parenting time orders.

The foregoing options are not to be invoked if the parties resolve their dispute “through an informal joint meeting” or through domestic relations mediation under the Friend of the Court Act.* MCL 552.641(2); MSA 25.164(41)(2).

*MCL 552.511, 552.513; MSA 25.176(11), 25.176(13).

If the court finds a parent in contempt for violation of a parenting time order, MCL 552.644(2)–(3); MSA 25.164(44)(2)–(3) authorize it to do one or more of the following:

- F Require additional terms and conditions consistent with its parenting time order.
- F Modify the parenting time order to meet the best interests of the child, after notice to both parties and a hearing on a party’s request.
- F Order makeup parenting time for the noncustodial parent.
- F Order a maximum fine of $100.
- F Commit the parent to the county jail for a period not to exceed 45 days for the first finding of contempt or 90 days for each subsequent finding of contempt. The court may grant the parent permission to leave the jail to go to work. The court must release a parent if the court has reasonable cause to believe that he or she will comply with the parenting time order.
- F Suspend the parent’s occupational, recreational, sporting, and/or driver’s license if the parent does not comply with an order for makeup and ongoing parenting time.

The court must state on the record its reasons for not ordering one of the foregoing sanctions. MCL 552.644(2)(h); MSA 25.164(44)(2)(h).

The foregoing provisions of the Friend of the Court Act and the SPTEA make no mention of domestic violence, and apply equally to abused and abusive parties without distinguishing their motivations for noncompliance. Nonetheless, safe and equitable application of the law requires consideration of whether a party’s noncompliance with an order involves perpetration of or escape from domestic abuse. With respect to modification of parenting time orders, MCL 722.27a(6)(h); MSA 25.312(7a)(6)(h) is noteworthy:

“(6) The court may consider the following factors when determining the frequency, duration, and type of parenting time to be granted:

* * *

(h) The threatened or actual detention of the child with the intent to retain or conceal the child from the other parent or from a third person who has legal custody. A custodial parent’s temporary residence with the child in a domestic violence shelter shall not be construed as evidence of the custodial parent’s intent to retain or conceal the child from the other parent.” [Emphasis added.]

Courts can take the following steps in response to concerns about domestic violence in proceedings to enforce parenting time orders under the Friend of the Court Act and the SPTEA:

- F Conduct ongoing screening for domestic violence in contested custody cases. See Chapter 2 for more information about this subject.
- F In cases where domestic violence is present, deter disputes over parenting time by drafting specific orders that adequately address the abuse. Avoid provisions for “reasonable parenting time” or “parenting time as arranged by the parties,” which are easily manipulated and thus likely to become vehicles for further abuse. See Section 4.6(B) on safe terms for parenting time.
- F Do not require the parties to negotiate or mediate their dispute, and carefully scrutinize any agreements resulting from these dispute resolution methods. Although resolution of parenting time disputes through mediation or negotiated settlement is possible under the Friend of the Court Act and the SPTEA, the use of such techniques in cases involving domestic violence raises serious safety and equitable concerns. Because these dispute resolution methods require cooperation between parties with equal bargaining power, they cannot operate fairly in relationships that are characterized by an abusive party’s one-sided exercise of power and control. Indeed, mediation or settlement negotiations may provide the abusive party with opportunities for further physical abuse, intimidation, or harassment. Moreover, domestic violence involves criminal behavior which as a matter of policy should not be the subject for agreed settlement between the perpetrator and victim. See Chapter 6 for more discussion of mediation.
- F Communicate to the abusive party that enforcement of the court’s order is the responsibility of the Friend of the Court, not the abused individual. Doing this may promote safety; some abusers may not engage in coercive behavior if they realize that the abused individual is not in a position to control efforts to enforce a custody or parenting time order.

- F Refrain from changing an existing custody or parenting time order until investigation of the case is complete. The National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges suggests that noncompliance to avoid abuse should not be grounds for modification of custody in favor of an abusive party, particularly when the abused party is not available to explain the circumstances surrounding the noncompliance.*

4.11 Preventing Parental Abduction or Flight

In cases where domestic violence is present, both the abuser and the victim may be at risk for taking physical control over children in violation of a court order for custody or parenting time:

- F An abusive parent whose parental rights have been limited may abduct a child as a means of punishing or controlling the abused parent.
- F An abused parent may feel unsafe with court-ordered terms for custody or parenting time and flee with a child to avoid contact with the abuser.

Courts can discourage abduction or flight if they identify cases where children are at risk and take preventive measures. Assessing and reducing the risk of parental abduction or flight is important, because the children affected can suffer serious emotional and physical harm. Uprooted from family and friends, these children may be told that they are leaving their homes because a parent is dead, or because a parent no longer loves them. They may be given new names and told not to reveal their true identities to anyone. In order to remain in hiding, a parent may fail to enroll a child in school or to seek necessary medical attention. In some cases, a parent's abduction or flight may entail a threat of physical violence to a child.

*See Sections 4.6(B) and (D), and Herrell & Hofford, Family Violence: Improving Court Practice, 41 Juvenile & Family Court J 20 (1990).

The court's best response to the problem of parental abduction or flight is to prevent the problem from arising in the first place — parents will not be so likely to take control over their children in violation of a custody or parenting time order if the order contains appropriate provision for the safe exercise of parental rights.* Such orders can be issued only if the court has full information about the parties' situation. Accordingly, the prevention of parental abduction or flight can start with a court's efforts to screen contested custody cases to identify disputes in which children are at risk. Awareness of such cases enables the court to include preventive measures in its orders for custody or parenting time.

Note: If a parent abducts or flees with a child, however, the same criminal statutes apply regardless of the parent's motivation. See Section 8.5 for more information about criminal penalties. Civil remedies to enforce Michigan parenting time orders are the subject of Section 4.10.

A. Risk Factors for Parental Abduction or Flight

When screening cases to assess the risk of parental abduction or flight, a number of factors can alert the court to potential danger. The presence of domestic violence between the parties to a child custody dispute is one factor that increases the risk of parental abduction or flight. As noted above, an abuser may abduct children as a means of asserting power in a relationship, and a victim may flee with children to find refuge from abuse. Other risk factors are as follows:*

- F A parent has previously abducted or threatened to abduct a child, or has a history of hiding the child.
- F A parent has no strong ties to the child's home jurisdiction.
- F A parent has a strong support network, especially if it includes friends or family living in another jurisdiction.
- F A parent has few financial ties to the geographical area where the child is living.
- F A parent is engaged in planning activities, such as quitting a job, selling a home, terminating a lease, closing a bank account, liquidating assets, hiding or destroying documents, applying for a passport, or undergoing plastic surgery.
- F A parent fails to cooperate with the other parent.
- F A parent has a criminal record, or shows disdain for the court's authority.
- F A parent denies or dismisses the value of the other parent to the child. This parent may believe that he or she knows what is best for the child and cannot see how or why it is necessary to share parenting with the other parent.

*Goelman, et al, Interstate Family Practice Guide: A Primer for Judges, §201 (ABA Center on Children & the Law, 1997). See Chapter 2 on identifying cases involving domestic violence.

- F The child is very young. Young children are easier to transport and conceal, and they cannot tell others of their plight.
- F A parent believes that the other parent has abused, neglected, or molested the child. This factor is particularly significant where the parent feels that authorities have dismissed the allegations as unsubstantiated and have taken no action to protect the child.
- F A parent is mentally ill and suffers from irrational or psychotic delusions that the other parent will harm him or her and/or the child.
- F A parent feels disenfranchised by the judicial system. Such parents may not have access to legal assistance due to lack of knowledge or financial need. Others may not have confidence in the ability of the judicial system to address their concerns.

Note: Some of the foregoing factors are also indicative of a risk for engaging in lethal violence. See Section 1.5(B) for a list of lethality factors to consider in conjunction with the foregoing factors.

B. Preventive Measures

Once it has screened a contested custody case for the foregoing risk factors, a court can further assess the need for preventive measures by considering the likelihood of harm to the child, and the chances of recovering the child. Depending upon the circumstances of the case, the court can take a number of preventive steps to deter violation:*

- F Draft custody or parenting time orders that adequately address the violence between the parties. Such orders should be specific — orders for “reasonable parenting time” or “parenting time as arranged by the parties” are easily manipulable and so are likely to become vehicles for further abuse. See Section 4.6(B) on safe terms for parenting time.
- F Avoid orders for joint custody when there is hostility between the parents, especially if they live in different jurisdictions. See Section 4.5 on joint custody.
- F Provide for supervised parenting time, with supervision by a neutral third party rather than by a party’s family member.
- F Prevent a party from removing a child from the child’s home jurisdiction without the written consent of the court, in compliance with MCR 3.211(C).
- F Require the visiting parent to give the custodial parent notice of where the children will be taken during parenting time.

*Goelman, et al, supra, §§201, 208. See also Farrell v Farrell, 133 Mich App 502, 513, n 3 (1984) for an example of a parenting time order with provisions designed to prevent abduction to a foreign nation.

*This option may be inadequate for children with dual citizenship.

*Goelman, et al, supra, §208. On the UCCJA and PKPA, see Lovik, Domestic Violence: A Guide to Civil & Criminal Proceedings, ch 13 (MJI, 1998).

*For sample provisions, see Goelman, et al, supra, §208.

- F Order a parent who poses a flight risk to post a bond that would be forfeited to the other parent upon flight. The amount of the bond should be sufficient to cover enforcement and recovery costs.
- F Impose passport restrictions on persons who are at risk of removing a child from the U.S. One such restriction might include ordering the parent to surrender the child's passport to the other parent during parenting time.*
- F Order a parent who is visiting from a distant location to deposit plane tickets with the custodial parent prior to exercising parenting time.
- F If a party has obtained a competing order for custody from another jurisdiction, and the court determines that this order should not be enforced, require the party to provide proof that the competing order is no longer in effect.
- F State the possible penalties for violating the court's order.

Another way for the court to limit the harmful effects of parental abduction or flight is to include provisions in its custody or parenting time orders that facilitate enforcement by courts in other jurisdictions. Such provisions should comply with the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act ("UCCJA"), MCL 600.651 et seq; MSA 27A.651 et seq, and the Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act ("PKPA"), 28 USC 1738A. In general, provisions that facilitate enforcement support the issuing court's authority to act in the case, and include:*

- F Proper identification of the parties to the order.
- F Identification of the parties present at the hearing, and whether the parties were represented by counsel.
- F Clear statements of the statutory basis for the court's exercise of jurisdiction over the proceeding. These statements should refer to specific provisions of the UCCJA, and the PKPA.* See MCL 600.653; MSA 27A.653 and 28 USC 1738A(c) for jurisdictional bases under these statutes.
- F Description of the circumstances surrounding service on and notice to the parties. See MCL 600.654–600.655; MSA 27A.654–27A.655 and 28 USC 1738A(e) regarding service and notice requirements under the UCCJA and the PKPA.

4.12 Resources for Locating Missing Children

The Federal Parent Locator Service (“FPLS”) may be used to obtain and transmit information for the purposes of: 1) enforcing any federal or state law regarding the unlawful taking or restraint of a child; or, 2) making or enforcing a child custody or visitation determination. 42 USC 653(a)(2)–(3).^{*} For these purposes, 42 USC 663(c) specifies that FPLS information is accessible to “authorized persons,” who are defined in 42 USC 663(d)(2) as:

- F Agents or attorneys of any state having the duty or authority to enforce a child custody or visitation determination.
- F Any court with jurisdiction to make or enforce a child custody or visitation determination, or any agent of such court.
- F Any agent or attorney of the United States or a state who has the duty or authority to investigate, enforce, or bring a prosecution with respect to the unlawful taking or restraint of a child.

Information as to the most recent address and place of employment of a parent or child may be disclosed to authorized persons under 42 USC 663(c). For purposes of parental kidnapping or custody enforcement, this information is not accessible to parents of a child.^{*}

Because release of information from the FPLS is potentially dangerous for individuals who are in hiding from a domestic abuse or child abuse perpetrator, states are required to take measures to safeguard the confidentiality of identifying information in cases where: 1) a protective order with respect to a parent or child has been entered; or, 2) the state has reason to believe that the release of the information may result in physical or emotional harm to the parent or the child. The same safeguards apply regardless of whether the information in the FPLS is sought for purposes of parental kidnapping or custody enforcement or for purposes child support enforcement. 42 USC 663(c). For more information about these safeguards, see Section 5.4.

Michigan law enforcement officers are required to report missing children to the Law Enforcement Information Network, the National Crime Information Center, and the missing children information clearinghouse in the Department of State Police. MCL 28.258–28.259; MSA 4.469(58)–4.469(59). These provisions are discussed further in 1 Michigan Family Law, §11.14 (5th ed, Institute for Continuing Legal Education, 1998).

^{*}The FPLS is also used for purposes of establishing parentage and child support enforcement. See Section 5.4.

^{*}However, parents have access to FPLS information for purposes of support enforcement. See Section 5.4.
